Max Internet announces a new service for residents of the Nechako Valley.

Max IT would like to announce a new website <http://www.nechako.info> open to all residents of the Nechako Valley. It is patterned after our highly successful <http://www.fsjames.com> which offers a huge variety of free services to residents of Fort St. James, and has become the #1 website for local information.

nechako.info is a "people's website" that allows and encourages you, from the privacy of your own or any other computer to promote information and trade in your own area. You do not require any special software or skills, simply point your browser to www.nechako.info and follow instructions as they come up. Most services require you to register solely to prevent spammers from overwhelming the system.

The site is designed to promote our area among ourselves and later, to others. In the current state of economic affairs and outrageous gas prices it only makes sense to promote ourselves in our own area first. Your skill or your secondhand items may be wanted by someone in the very next town.

About Max Internet:

Max Internet Technologies Inc. has been Fort St. James' local ISP since 2002. It's roots go back to the first actual Internet company in the Nechako Valley in early 1996. We offer dial-up, ADSL, MaxAir rural broadband and direct LAN connections in Fort St. James. We have our own server bank with fiber connection and currently host approximately 50 websites that are concerned with being truly 'local' in their representation. We provide IT employment and training opportunities for local residents that have made for some great successes for former employees.

Our in-house joke is that the Google cheques mounted on our wall are proof that you don't have to export raw resources to make money off Americans!
